- Integrate local and traditional knowledge to help manage and steward lands and waters, and help support the implementation of resource management plans and agreements
- Supervise and train crew on boat safety, operations, and operational checklists
- Uphold the responsibility of ensuring the safety of all passengers including crew, Cowichan Tribes staff, and other on-board passengers
- Monitor, document, and report the work of the SSW vessel crew
- Assist Marine Projects Supervisor and the Salish Sea Watch Coordinator with communication to local, provincial, and/or federal government on observations of concern
- Operate and maintain the SSW vessel to the proper safety standards, while keeping certifications up to date and keeping logs updated (including, but not limited to vessel & boat pre-trip checklists and maintenance)
- Plan and participate in emergency safety drills for vessel safety as scheduled and all other safety planning activities, such as creating trip safety plans
- Engage in emergency spill response training and other training as required
- Observe, record & report activities of interest for commercial and recreational vessels; derelict vessels; the presence of herring spawn, whale activity, marine birds, urchin and kelp bed abundance and monitor beach activity, especially with regard to shellfish & culturally significant sites
- Collaborate with the S-hwuhwa'us Thi'lut Kw'atl'kwa team in prioritizing and conducting environmental monitoring/observations, research, data collection and ecological restoration work
- Engage with community for the purpose of outreach and education to ensure laws, regulations, guidelines, and protocols are understood
- Maintain accountability through record keeping of daily activities, meetings and email communications
- Generate monthly reports and work plans as directed
- Liaise with other departments, external stakeholders as required
- Participate in regular staff meetings
- Other related duties as required
